The Journal of Early Modern History warmly invites article submissions for peer review. In late 2010/early 2011, the JEMH transitioned to a new group of editors with the retirement of its longtime editor and co-founder, James Tracy. It also has become the official journal of the Center for Early Modern History at the University of Minnesota. In keeping with the scope of the Center, the JEMH is now explicitly dedicated to the study of early modernity from a world-historical perspective; whether through individual case studies, comparative essays, or by the grouping of articles around a given thematic, chronological, or geographic frame in our twice-yearly, special issues. We are especially interested in the investigation of new kinds of contacts, comparisons and contrasts across a global range of human and physical geographies, covering the period from 1300-1800.

Please visit our web site for examples of recently published works and the online “Instructions for Authors” page at brill.nl/jemh, or contact the journal at jemh@umn.edu for more information.

Article contributions should be submitted online at:

Join us in celebrating the future of the early modern past!